

work out there, so I kept a callin' 'em and kept a callin' 'em, so they finally made a switch. They switched a switch. My nephew up here had one. They had fixed his well. Well I've got three, four nephews livin' right here. One lives out here and one a little bit futher. One lives right here in one of them Jim Walter homes and another lives a little further down in a little white house kinda off the road. He's the one that had this done to his place. And they went and switch them switches with him and put it on mine what they took off mine and put it over there. I don't know if they ever fixed it right or not, but they fixed mine then. They told me to be shore and turn it off durin' a stormy night. I went out there and turned it off one stormy night. Well, the next day, no water. I done without water for about a week and then I called my nephew up here, he come and fixed it for me. And if that kind of switch I've got there--I just had to put insurance on my--
