

But they always have some kind of neat clothes. But the mans, they have them buckskin leggins and moccasins and--how you call this--them otter hide? And they have feathers on their head.

(Did your mother have a buckskin dress?)

Yeah, she had one, but she don't hardly use it. She said they were lot of trouble. 'Cause them fringes. She said them buckskin dress was lot of troubles. She don't use it. She's got it but she don't use it. Just had it put away.

(How did she keep it when she had it put away?)

Well, she had a trunk. She had her trunk. It was in a trunk. It was just a wood box made in a trunk and somebody was smart enough that made it for her. She keep her clothes in there.

BOKE'S STORE

(One thing I started to ask you--going back to those stores--Boke's store and that Red Store--did they have any candy?)

Umhum.

(What kind of things did you used to get?)

You know, how would you call this candy--them long ones--got red, white--

(Peppermint?) Yeah. But they're big ones. They got some in town yet, too. Them big candies.

(What kind of candy did the Indians like best?)

Well, I don't know what kind of candy they like but I know there's some candy about this long. It's a brown candy--I don't know how they call it. They say it was good to eat. And that's what they always buy and eat it. They're about this long. They're all tied in a bunch like that. And do you know what they give for a whole bunch? They just cost a dime. Yeah, they get things like that. Now you can't buy nothing cheap. Everthing's high. So I just thought I might tell you what little I know this time about the candy. At the old store they keep that
