

I know of. (

(There must have been a lot of people here in those early times.)

Yeah.

(Well, Moody was a pretty good sized place at one time wasn't it?)

Well, it's been scattered ever since I can remember. Moody was about 3/4 mile right south of where it's at right now. It's off the road now. Moving around, right there where the bridge is there. Right across the creek there they had about three or four stores there one time and Post Office.

Woman's voice: Yeah, they had a store up there north at Walter Moore's. there was a sawmill and a cotton gin, where the spring is now.)

(Well, that was a pretty good--well that was a little town, wasn't it?)

Yeah, just a store and cotton mill and saw mill --

(About what year was that, could you make a guess?)

Along about --

Woman's voice: It be around 1912, '16, somewhere along in there. It was there when I started to school.

Yeah, but it was there before then.

Woman's voice: You know it burned up the first school up there. They build another one. It was two school houses and store up there.

CHURCH AND FARMING

(Well, there must have been a lot of farming around here in the early days?)

Yeah, there was lots of farming. Lots of cotton raised around here.

(But you look around now you don't see any farming?)

You don't see none.

(Just timber and pasture is all you see.)

Woman's voice: All the old farmers done starved to death. (Laughter)
