

Jenny: The best is the Beaver State blankets.

(Oh, they had them back then?)

Jenny: Yeah, they had them way back there. I don't know where they get them, but that's the Beaver State shawl and the Beaver State blanket. They don't fade. You can't wash them. You could send them to the cleaners. I do. But not the kind you wear in a bed<sup>s</sup>-blankets. These are Beaver State blankets.

(Oh, those Beaver States are beautiful.)

Jenny: And they really cost.

(Oh, I know it.)

Jenny: They cost $25 to $30--some $40.

(Have you ever been to one of these ceremonies where they name the girl Audematon?)

Jenny: No, that's way back there before we was ever born. It's way older than we are. That happen when she was young--just a teenager, I guess. And him too, he wasn't there cause his mother always say the year she died, well, he was born that year. Yeah. So she said. You know, in those days when somebody passed away, they take it hard. They cut their hairs. She had her finger cut too. Just punishing herself. She got so hurt if her daughter passed away that she don't even stay at the camp. She just go out, crying around out there. He was little tiny baby and his aunt, his mother's sister went and took care of him when he was a baby when his mother goes out. Just weeping, crying and she comes in late at night all tired out.

(What did you say that this girl died of?)

Jenny: Childbirth. I guess that year they had measles--everybody. Lots of children died with measles that year. So she was expecting
