

(Well I guess it would.)

And they thought that salt went through, they had a big kettle outfit and they'd wash that off and they had wire they strung it up--

LOTS OF WILD GAME IN EARLY DAYS

(Did you have lots of wild game too?)

Oh Lord yes! Had all kinds a wild meat. Out here on wild cook out here where had them Army officers (static and interference) that game reserve, that Bunch Mountain and Beagle Mountain, well that whole country now, all them mountains' is fenced in--

(In that Cookson Hills Game Reserve.)

And the turkeys, pens they built and furnish turkeys now to ship back here and the deer what they got here is from New Mexico. And they had that high fence fixed y'know. Well, they'd take them small airplanes and they'd get around and gather 'em up, y'know. They wasn't no trees to bother anything. They'us separatin' some of them behind and some out on the side, they'd put them deer in there and that truck'd come and get 'em and haul 'em here and they sold 'em. And turkeys mmmmmmm. Now they'd fix a hole--a ditch-- and they'd hole this outfit sorta and they'd put feed up in here y'know and these turkeys, they never look down like a chicken to gobble, they'us always tryin' to get out a their pen. That's where we got the turkeys. I helped fix pens and ditches.

(Well, you've got turkey in this country now.)

Yeah.

(Lots of deer too?)

Oh Lord! Here while back, 'fore I moved to here, long in spring, I wuz settin' out there on the porch and heerd sompin out there and I looked--there was two of the biggest Buck deer--them horns, they
