

now. But he's the boy that got it dedicated over the Methodist. And it was more, I think, to boost him. He got this little Scotch graveyard right up here -- right there and long in later years fire come along and burnt it up. Mr. Marks got the old bell off of there and I can remember he had it over here at his place and he'd ring it, noon. And it jest laid there and rotted. Well we was out -- there was some people come in here name Weybus and they lost a little girl. She was buried up there. And we was up there and decided to build jest a somethin' there so it they's havin' a funeral y'know so they could take the corpse into. And they built that little old shack up at that house. Well, Byner Murphy lived up there and he built hay barn there and anybody couldn't get in there to it. But they took some interest and we all talked it over and they went and got some lumber and tin and we jest built that little thing that's up there now.

NO UNDERTAKERS IN EARLY DAYS - FATHER MADE CASKETS - WOMEN COVERED AND LINED THEM

(Mrs. Fallin, was there ever a place called Ruby?)

Yes, but now that's out west of here and I never did know right where its located. I've heard its right west of here. But I jest never did know right where Ruby was located.

Third man: I never did either. I've heard of the place a long time.

Gibb: Seems to me like, the McMains used to live over there a mile west of the county line. And I figure it was back south down in there where Ruby was, but I jest never did know right where it was at. But Josh couldn't remember where its at eight. He is old. Josh is.

(Well, he didn't try really,)

Gibb: It seems like that was right. Well, I had that in mind. I don't know whether somebody told me, way back there, but in my own mind that is where I had it figured. I might be plumb wrong on that, but (words not clear)
