

and swimming. Finally one of them look up and they saw that man sitting way up there in that tree. I guess they didn't know any better. They didn't know it was the chief. So they said, "Hey, look! There's a man sitting up there in the tree." So the rest of the children came up. The boys, especially the boys, and they holler at him and they said everything to him. Then they pick out, pick up mud, you know. And then they start throwing at him to get him to come down and this man told them to quit. "Quit, quit." They wouldn't quit and they kept throwing at him and just had him all muddy. He got mad and he finally came down and he said, "Let me tell you," he said, "Let me tell you childrens. Look what you all done. I'm going back to the camp. I'm going to tell the camp to move and leave you all." And they just laugh at him. They just make fun of him and laugh at him. They thought he was fooling them, you know. And then they went on their way playing again, swimming. And so this man walked to the camp. Must be quite a ways--their camp was over the hill. There was a big hill and their camp was way back there and the creek was on this side. So he went back and they didn't pay no attention to him and went on playing. And it was coming dark--sundown. After the sundown, you know, in a little while it gets dark. So he got to the camp and he hollered. He said, "I want this camp to be moved." And whatever he says, they all have to do. He said, "I want--I want the camp to be moved. We're gonna move tonight." And some of the folks said, "What about our children?" See, the children are way over here. "What about our children? My daughter is way over there. My son--they took the baby." And oh, they didn't want to move. He was a chief and if they don't obey him, well, there's trouble. So the womenfolks just
