

That's in this modern day, well I never will forget, I went up there with some corn to the, to Luke Tyner's to get some corn ground, you know. That was the only place we had to get corn ground without going to Evansville, Arkansas.

And went up there and Luke'd started to grind and I don't know for some reason or other those stone burrs had busted y'know and got up there and he come out there y'know. You don't remember him I don't guess. They wasn't a comedian about town a tall, but what they was old man Luke, y'know. You know Dan was always full a jokes and fun y'know and ever thing and his daddy was the same way only more so. He come out there and Dan told him, said, "Well says, I got some corn here in the wagon I want to get ground." Well, Luke says I can't grind it and dad says, what's the matter, and he says, "Well I busted the burrs open". Guess busted 'bout half or sumpin you know, and he said he just bust'em right apart that way y'know. He stood there a little bit and he said, "I'll tell you what I'll do." Said, "You go right up here on the hillside and saw down one of those big trees and saw some big blocks and make a set of wooden burrs, I'll grind your corn." (laughter) And I never fergit that. I can see that old man a standin' there and my dad and me settin up there in that wagon jest as plain as if it was yesterday.

Woman: Make three sets of those burrs before they got the metal burrs and there's those dumb people round over there and I think if it was me, I'd a kept one of them, but now they never kept a thing. They don't have anything. Luke kept them burrs, but he got burrs again and went ahead a grindin' corn. But of course then, it took two or three weeks or two or three months to get anything like that y'know and I don't know where he got'em or anything, but they looked after he got'em in there and ever thing, it jest looked like it did beforehand, to me you'know, of course it might a been whole lot a difference. But later on down, why a feller by the name of Turnbull got hold a that old
