

too and a good cook. He butchered them and fix the meat, I guess, and build a fire and cook it. Cook the meat. And he told the boy to go after the others. He said, "I'm going to be cooking over here." Just nothing but meat, no bread--nothing. Just meat, barbequed. So this other boy went back and he got over there where the other boys were resting. He brought them there and they all ate that meat, barbequed meat and get full and they travel on again. I don't know why they go out like that and get themselves killed. Sometimes they just wipe them up. But when Black Bear is leading the boys, they always come home safe. But sometimes they just clean up on them. They get killed. Because Indians and Indians were enemies in those days. Not only white people--they fight among themselves.

INDIANS PRAYED TO IDOLS BEFORE GOING ON THE WARPATH

(You know this particular story when they escaped, did he ever say where that was?)

Jenny: Yeah, when he was living. He knows where it's at. But like I said, you know these stories are very interesting now. In those days seems like we didn't care to even listen when they tell stories. We don't even care to listen to it. But I wish we did now. It's very interesting to listen to them stories about them. We didn't care.

(I just wondered if you know, if you remember if this was down in Mexico or out west someplace?)

Jenny: I don't know, maybe my dad know. But I never did care to ask him where it's at. But they travel all over. They travel way down Mexico, Kansas, maybe on the other side, way out east, out west. They travel many, many miles. Sometimes they stay out two or three
