

Indians.

(What were you saying about the Pawnees' hair?)

Jenny: Oh, they always had their head shaved off. Over here they leave a little. Their hair always be like that, standing up.

(What's the Kiowa name for Pawnee?).

Jenny: Gúkaæg̀w, Gúkaæg̀w.

(What?)

Jenny: Gúkaæg̀w, Gúkaæg̀w.

(What does that mean?)

Jenny: I don't know what it means, Gúkaæg̀w. It means something like coyote, or roam like a coyote.

(What's the Kiowa name for Osage?)

Jenny: Gòsŵ.g̀w, gòsŵ.g̀w. I don't know what that means in Kiowa. It's just a name.

STORY ABOUT BLACK BEAR SAVING HIS WARRIORS FROM FREEZING TO DEATH

(What about that other story that you started to tell me about Setgong a? I didn't, when we were talking about it, have the tape recorder on. There's something about he went out and got the raw-hides to cover his men.)

Jenny: I thought I told you before. You know, it's something like getting in that cave. There was another one that she got into a cave. And he just had about four or five men with him. And same way--but these were Indians. They were both Indians. And he run, they run up in the hills like that. And the Indians, they just all camp around there to starve them out. And they stayed in there. One night, I guess, it was he look for a place like that. He found it. I wonder why he'd always do that?

(I don't know.)
