

then frost. When the frost hits the leaves, that's when it kills them. But you'll refer to it as "Killin' Frost". Well, we got name for that too--For the frost, you know. And then after the frost, then comes the snow. That's that Chandler Creek. Boy, that look's good.

(Lot of water in it.)

(Interruption)

Whenever that frost hits, that's the end of the autumn. (Apache term). That's last stages. (Apache term) That's the frost. (Apache term). That's when it frosts. (Apache term). That's frost. That's killing Frost. And after that, after the leaves all fall. Then the seasons (Apache term). Wintertime. And then you can expect blizzards and anything.

(Some conversation on gambling with cards.)

WATER CRESS

Mary's dad (Mary Poafpybitty's father). His name is David. And they call that David's Spring. Yeah, and that water's--Oh, gosh you oughta see that water! It's just runnin' the whole time. Well, that's that Chandler Creek. That "Chandler" I don't know where that come in. But this David's Springs over here they're gonna--They's trying to dam it up one time. They should have. I don't know why they didn't.

(Well, is it sulphur water?)

No. It's good water. If you had your water jug I'd get you a jug of it! No, the "water krauts". You know what "water krauts" are?

(No.)

Don't you know? They eat them.

(Is it green?)

I call'em "water krauts". (Water cress) Water greens are good if you call 'em greens. It's lot of it down there. Some people eat that like spinach. Serve it the same way spinach or cabbage. I guess it's healthy to eat. Water kraut. Course I don't know whether the Indians, or the Apaches especially, they don't go for that, lettuce, and spinach and water kraut. They don't eat grass, that's for stocks, horses and cattle.
