

T-34

Kiowa-Apache Pow-wow (Manatidie)

August 8, 1967

By: Julie A. Jordan

Transcribed by: Monette Coombes

Wallace Redbone: --if I could be of some help. And I'm very happy to see some little gifts there she wants to give to some of their friends. We wish she had more to scatter around, but she said these that she had pledged would fulfill her pledge this year. The food went out to the (could not understand rest of this sentence.) So again, I want to thank you for coming to be with us this afternoon.

Unidentified Man: Marvin Saddleblanket will sing a song that he has composed himself. He want to singa this song for this special. Wallace here, would like for J. T. to dance with him. You know, sometime ago, a prayer has been asked for and behind the staff that this boy--his father was greatly excited at that time last year that a prayer request had been uttered back there behind the staffs. And Wallace told his father that, "Don't worry, everything will be all right:"

Today this prayer has come to fulfillment and he wants this boy to dance with him. Junior Washee. Junior Washee. Junior Washee? We are calling for Junior Washee.

(Interruption)...Susie Wetzalline is holding back for reason of Spencer Mowod (?) in their sorrow. But she said that she want her daughter there, Wallace's niece, to place those blankets or shawls on her boys there. No one picked those shawls or blankets of of these boys. Someone is already designated to get those blankets and shawls off of Susie Wetzalline's boys. Do not take the shawls off. Someone is already designated. (Interruption)

...said that in behalf of his daughter--

(Harold states this.)

--she played basketball and made all State. I seen her play. She was the smallest, shortest girl on the team. She went into the higher bracket in basket-ball on her part. And she has finished school and is now going to Business College in Oklahoma City this fall. So, in her behalf, he has asked for this special and also the other daughter that is taking part in the program this afternoon. So in their part--in their behalf, he has asked for this song