

also. I think we are ready now for the song, Marvin.

(Songs for 10 minutes.)

Unidentified Man: Let me have your attention just for a few moments please. I personally--I want to say this. You know our people are modest, but today, I want to tell you people. Many times I have gone before you and expressed myself in many different ways, but I can't help but feel, the feeling that existed here when the staff was picking up while ago. The spirit that existed. The people that depend on these staffs, for prayers. Those prayers have been realities and this family that called for these specials, the Redbone family, they are the nucleus of this dance. I don't want to criticize or anything that misunderstand it, but to these families and good people, they add prestige to the Kiowa-Apache people to this way of life. This was gone at one time, but they revived it and they have accomplished something good out of it. So let's you and I might enjoy this way of life. To share the spirit that exists before us today. The tears that's shed--just like my brother said, "I had to shed a tear." He's glad he's alive. And also the prayers--he's seen that his prayers were answered. Those things are experience in this way of life and I'm glad that you people respect this way of life, so now that this family want to express themselves. They want to share their blessings. God has been good to them. Will you folks bear with me just for a few moments. Will Lucille Poolaw, on the north side--Lucille Poolaw. Lucille Poolaw. Vera Houston--over here on the south side. Anna Caulgy. (background conversation). Ruth White. Pearl Walkingsky. Pearl Walkingsky over on the south side. Anna Caulgy. Anna Caulgy (not clear). Wallace Redbone says this; he said he is happy, coming to the close of the 7th. annual pow-wow. He said I feel good because my family come behind me. Makes me feel good. Our 7th. annual pow-wow has been a success so I want to do this because I feel good. I want these man dancers to come up here. You dancers down here! All you men dancers. (Background noise and could not understand.)
