

They're long, you know, with beads, covered beads. They're long. Carry it on their shoulder or on their belt or on their saddlehorn. But they say this is in a smaller bag and they tie it right on their belt and carry it. And when they're in a hurry it's much easier to handle. And that's what they claim.

(You say they use this though with the Ten Grandmothers too?)

They use that too.

(How did they use it there?)

They use it just the same way with the other pipe. They call this a regular Indian pipe. The other peace pipe, why, they got it a certain time of the year--say maybe 1865, 1860. And the other pipe--that rock that they make it comes from way up in the Black Hills up in the Sioux country. They make that out with a knife, you know. (Oh, they do? Have you ever heard which kind of pipe the Kiowas used longest? I mean if this is oldest or is that peace pipe the oldest?)

The peace pipe is the oldest. Wait.

(O.K.)

HIDE SCRAPER MADE OF BONE AND STEEL

Yeah, oh, I wish I had one of them. They've got a, they've got a steel made of braid, I'd call it braid. It's about that big and they got it sharpened. And they put it right in here, right in here and then they take a sinew, like this, and wet that sinew and they rap it around like that. When they get it real tight and then they take this, you know.

(And what do they use that for?)

They use that for making a buckskin or buffalo hide. It's a scraper.

They scrape the inside of the hide. Oh, I've got some, I think. I
