

of weeks and meet back--meet again and by that time we should have wrestled with ourselves to the extent that we know whether we want to help or whether we don't want to help because we don't need any dead weight. You know that. We've got to have individuals who are willing to give of their time and money and their abilities and maybe go out and make a contact, or attend the meetings that might be valuable information to us. I kinda feel like that if we did this, that the next time we met, we would know whether we are ready or not because we've talked about the things here that are--that mean a lot to all of us and we can jump up and say, "Yeah, we're ready to go" on kind of impulsive type of thing and I just don't know whether that is right for proper procedure. Because we need to sit on it awhile and think about it and the next time we meet, if everybody is willing to go we go, and if they are not willing, probably will not come back and those that are, probably will show up and I don't know--you've got to start somewhere. If you start with four of five and get something done, maybe the others will become interested and want to take part.

Voice in background - question: That'll be up to the group, depending on how you feel about the situation.

Voice in background: Can Bob and Boyce come back?

Ace: Would you all like to come back, Bob and help us organize?

Bob: You bet your life.

Ace: one of the things we would like to do for proper organization, what the things are that are necessary within an organization like this, purposes and objectives. What order the come in, etc, and if you'all are willing and will meet with us then we'll be glad to meet then.

Bob: That will be the 30th then.

Ace: Does that sound satisfactory to everybody? The 30th?
