

Cecil: "Don't throw it," you know. The mother told them not to hit them tipi poles with that wheel. But "Don't ever throw it on top of the tipi."

Jenny: I know all of that.

Cecil: You go ahead.

Jenny: At the beginning it was on this earth, where we are at. A young girl, a princess of the tribe--I don't know what tribe. Anyway, it was a princess. And that's a girl when you call them princess--young woman. Well, anyway, that's the way it started out. It was a princess.

(What's the name for that princess in Kiowa?)

Jenny: Audémaeton.

(Okay.)

Jenny: Audémaeton. She went and passed away from this earth here. She passed away. And I don't know--it's just a story--and went up in heaven. Somewhere above up in heaven or somewhere in the above they say, into another world. And when she got there, she became just like we are up there. And thunder, you say a thunder man-- a thunder man met her up there. He got to liking her. He got in love with her and they got married up there. Well, she married to a thunder and when this thunder young man goes out to work--they say he's a thunder but it was a young man. When he goes out--they had a place where they were living and when he's going out he tell his wife never to open the door when the rain is coming and thunder and storm is coming. Never open the door but stay inside. He said, "Because he was one of them." And he always tell her that, not to open the doors or stick her head out when the rain is coming and it's raining, thundering and lightening. He said, "Don't ever
