

try to look out but stay inside." And then one time a storm was coming and lightening and thundering and then she said, "I wonder why he always tell me not to look out. I wonder what's going to happen." So she went and opened the door and she look out. See all the rain that was coming.

Cecil: Let me tell you this. This is a good story because today that things still existing. They've got them today. What happened, she's going to tell you about them, twins. They've got them today, and those ten gods. It's two of them things--she's going to tell you about them. It's a good story. It must of happened really. And they got them two gods, dzaidetali, they call them. And they're twins. It's a good story. (speaks Kiowa)

Jenny: I know.

Cecil: All right, but they're still here--maybe hundreds, thousands of years way back there. We've still got it.

(You just said she stuck her head out--)

Jenny: She opened the door and stood at the door and look out. Why her husband always tell her not to stick her head out and see but she did. "I wonder that's going to happen," she thought. And she stood at the door and look out. All at once it thunder, you know how it goes. Just knock her down, kind of burn up her body (hands to cheeks). And so, no she didn't. It knock her down but she jumped up and stood right at the door again but she was out. So when the rain was over, her husband was coming home and she was standing at the door. He thought she was smiling but she was burn up. And her skin was-- And as soon as her husband saw her, he says, "I told you not to do that." He said, "That's why I always tell you, I advise you not to stick your head out. Now you got into
