

of them things. I wonder what's going to happen. He always tell me not to do that." And finally they were going out. She had her little boy. He was walking already. And she went and kicked one away from where it was laying and there was a hole in there, a hole. Then she tripped in there, like that, and she saw another world. This was it, you know, where we're at. It was live and she could see the grass and trees way down there. She said, "No wonder he always tell me not to move these things. I know now I want to go down there, because that's where I come from. My folks are down there and I'm going to go down there." She went and covered it again and went back to her home. And she--then she got ready. She got a, I don't know what, I guess he kills buffalo that they eat, you know and the raw hides, you know. Well, she, when he's done, I guess he--here's a hide right here and then you cut it on the edge, you know. Kind of narrow like that and keep going like that. And then you make a rope out of that. You know it's stout. That hide is stout. You can't break it when it dries. So that's what she's been doing. Just making a ropes out of buffalo hide. And she was getting ready to go down there where she's seen. Come down on the rope. For if she jump off, she fall. She was getting ready. Everytime her husband come, she hide everything, so he wouldn't know. But anyway when she got all prepared for so many days, I guess she had a long rope fixed--buffalo hide, strong. Then he went out again. Then she took her little boy. She said, "I'm going to take him with me and we're gonna go down to the world." So she know where to go. And she went there and she tied herself right here (under arms, just above waist). She went and got a big post. And she hammer it on top of that bank. She hammer it down deep, I guess, where it hold
