

into the deepest water. He said, "I'm going to go down into the water to fix myself up--to take that witch away." So he went into the water and after he came out, why he was all right. That witch whatever she witch him with, it went away and she died.

(Oh, is that right? What was that last name?)

Cecil: Tódwkw. Tódwkw. His name was after that big old snapping turtle.

(Oh, yes.)

Cecil: (speaks Kiowa)

(What was the Wichita woman's name?)

Cecil: I don't know her name but I heard that story many, many times.

(You know, you were saying that this old witch woman lived off by herself. You know they used to live off by themselves. How was that?)

Jenny: Well, maybe you read in a Bible that--a story book about that the witch woman. In our tribe, we call the witch woman a bad medicine woman. They eat certain things. There are some certain things that they are not allowed to eat. And it's kind of dangerous because sometimes when they sit down to eat--you ain't dare to pass back over there cause she's gonna witch you. You might even fall, fall and just black out. Go ahead.

STORY ABOUT YELLOW WOLF TREATING CECIL'S MOTHER FOR A STROKE

Cecil: This happened in 1920, somewhere in there. She knows it and I know it. And it happened in that house over there. My mother was 94 years old. And she went to the hospital for some sickness. And it happened at the hospital. She got, you white people call it a stroke. Well, and there was a man, he was a witch. His name
