

was Yellow Wolf. Still living at that time, 1924-26. So they called me and I went down there to my mother. Her face was twisted. Her eyes was out of (normal position) and her legs was twisted. She just twist. So the doctor called me in the office and he said, "You take your mother back. She'll never be cured. So be that way the rest of her life. She's got a stroke." We call it a witch. I brought her home. I told the doctor, "We got a man out there will doctor." So I brought her home. She couldn't drink water very well. So we took her in that house. My father came and her sister came. There was a lot of people came because she was sick. She couldn't eat very good. So my father said, "Now you go and get Old Man Yellow Wolf." Yellow Wolf and my mother's mother were sisters. So I went over there and I got over there. When I got over there, he already know what I came for. How he know it, I don't know. He was a witch doctor. So when I got over there to see about my mother, I had to make a cigarette. So when I made that cigarette, I give it to him to smoke. That's where you--the doctor whoever he may be. So I give a cigarette and he smoke. He said, "All right, I get ready." He said, "I know what's the matter." So he got his medicine bag--all kinds of funny things, you know. You know, witches, they're funny people. Well, I brought him here. I got here. She was laying in that room. He says, "I don't want nobody to get mad. I don't want nobody to throw rocks. Keep the children away from that house." That's Yellow Wolf was talking. "And when I go to doctor this mother, I don't want nobody to get mad or use any bad language. I want everybody to be in good order." And so now my mother was laying there. He says, "I know what's the matter with your mother." He says, "She's been witched. She must
