

Cecil: A lot of womens use that too.

Jenny: They just kind of scrape some of it with a knife. Just put very little of it.

(I see. What do the women use it for?)

Cecil: Huh?

(What do the women use it for?)

Cecil: Lots of these women, they take that and they chew it. And they mix it with--there's an Indian perfume, they call it. It's a leaf. Just grows out there and it's got pink flowers on it. You put it on a blanket. And they mix that and they put it in their mouth and they blow it and that thing gets on there. They use it, most of them, in their hair. They take that and make a tea out of--like that. And it's so strong, why they pour it in their hair. And they just wet it. When they go out, why, people could smell that. The odor of it. That's what they use.

A CERTAIN SEED WAS USED AS A LOVE MEDICINE

(You know, this is a little bit off the subject, but does the Kiowa--did they ever have any kind of what they call love medicine? Where, you know, if you wanted to make somebody, attract somebody to be your sweetheart?)

Cecil: They've got it, but I never, never can find it. It used to grow over there at Saddle Mountain. But I never can find it. It's a bush that grows about that high. (speaks Kiowa) Your father used that. It's a little seed. It's just like tea. You know, this tea. A little black cedar, kind of long, but they use that. They use that for young men.

(Oh, they do?)

Cecil: They use that to put it on their blanket. And they claim
