

(Would they ever maybe like share their medicines with the other people?)

Jenny: Well, I guess that's why they get together. This one may not have much medicine to give to the sick. The other one help him too. That's the way they help each other. The Buffalo Medicine men I'm talking about, not the idol worshippers--those others. I know cause my father was in that.

(Did they ever do it in any particular time of year. Or anything like that?)

Jenny: No, just when they're called to someone's that is sick. And when they call them they say when a person is wanted that's when they really can get their sick healed up.

Cecil: Say, by the way, I want to tell you about that wreck.

(Okay.)

HOW THE INDIANS DOCTORED SKIN TROUBLES

Cecil: But wait, don't. I'm just going-- The doctor, your people, they call it syphilis that causes that or pox. We Indians don't call it that. I just thought about that a while ago. There is some white people that's got that. I know some ladies. You know, it just looks like little pimples. And they just red. And I ask the doctor--he says sometimes this syphilis causes from that. It goes to the eyes to make you blind. Sometimes it goes to the nose. But that witch man, he take this red paint. It comes from the ground. I know where there's some of it. It's real---

Jenny: It's not the witch people that doctor that. It's the Buffalo mans that doctor that!

Cecil: (speaks Kiowa) They take that red paint and when they do that, witch you with that. Her father knows how to. Sometimes
