

Well not too much. Didn't have it to carry.

(Didn't have it to carry.)

Oh potatoes, apples and beans, not too much canned stuff, most people grew stuff back in those days.

(Uh-huh. I guess people done lots of trading too. And they'd bring stuff in and trade it for something.)

Eggs and things like that.

(Yeah. How about the timber? Was there lots of timber in the early days?)

Well in places there was. And in places there wasn't.

(Uh-hum)

Alluwe was a town on the prairie. But you take back west of Alluwe there's lot of hollows down there that I never did see.

(Yeah. I know that along the river there there's lots of timber.)

Yeah. Lightning Creek.

(Lightning Creek)

It runs pretty close to Alluwe.

(Yeah. And uh--lots of pecan trees in that country.)

Yes.

(Uh-huh)

A CREEK THAT FLOWS TWO WAYS

There's a creek up there someplace, I forget where its at. Its uh--if the river would raise it would run east.

(Well)

If Lightning Creek would rise it would run west.

(Well my goodness)

It was just a drain between the creek and river.

(Yeah. Well run two different directions depending on the raising of the water.)

Yeah.
