

They know the story.

Cecil: It's in Colorado somewhere--Montana or somewhere in there.
It's still standing.

Jenny: (speaks in Kiowa)

Cecil: I know the name but I just forgot. Oh, I forgot it now.
I have to--(speaks in Kiowa)

Jenny: (speaks Kiowa)

Cecil: I got the picture of it here but the name of it--I guess you'll have to have somebody else.

(Well, you might think of it.)

Jenny: I think I'm going to ask one old man. He's way older than we are. I'm going to ask him cause nobody else won't know. I don't think anybody else knows the name of that stone, rock or whatever.

(Would Isaac--do you think he'd know anything about these stars and about this weather?)

Jenny: Yes, yes he'll know.

(Maybe you could ask him about that too?)

Jenny: Yeah, I will. That story is the way I told you. And there were four brothers and (unintelligible) but they were coming in.
(speaks in Kiowa) They were coming in and they heard her crying.
They're the ones (speaks Kiowa). The girl made a plan to go up there. She didn't want to come back to the earth again. They call her brothers all girls--Damatan.

Cecil: Star Girls. I'm trying to get the name of that big rock.
It's still standing today.

Jenny: And they said that tribe knows that story too. They told
