

Maggie and Jiggs. And course the mother would load us all up and she would get the lady who was taking care of us. Load us all up in car and we had--I think my mother had a car that was kind of an old southern passenger car. Had little seats behind the front seat. You pull down and they would, you have to with all us kids and her and the housekeeper we would go up there and look at the show, Maggie and Jiggs. Course we all fall asleep coming back home but we really enjoyed that show. And another event was kind of--we looked forward to each year was the--we would--our parents would take us--I remember going to the rodeo at Ponca City, the Hundred and One Ranch Rodeo. And I would generally go with my cousin, Clarence Hokiah, see. It was quite an afternoon and quite a event in our lives when we would get to go to the Hundred and One Wild West Show which would have features, rodeos and Indians. And I remember they --lot of animals at the time. Quite a menagerie at the Hundred and One Ranch at this time. And it was quite a--like, I said, quite an event in our lives when we got to go to see the rodeo and they'd have a movie star over there. And I remember Tom Mix was over there and Jack Hoxie, and such old time stars as that. And course we'd take our lunch over there and just make it a day over there. I don't believe they had any night shows that I remember, we'd just take the afternoon show and come on home. And in--as I grew a little older that we would each summer go out to our farm. And my dad would--they would bale hay. I remember when we used to have the old--we used to call them "go-devils". And we had the old horse that would go around in a circle and bale this hay. Quite a tedious job now imagine, but those days it'd take, I'd say a month to bale hay. And we would harvest our wheat or oats and we stack these shocks up and then we'd take them and put them in the thrashing machine. Which was quite an operation in itself. And beings there were quite a few hands at the time were working these threshin crews. They would be around, I'd say twenty or thirty men. And they would
