

(That was your home.)

I was raised up in it.

(That old log house.)

Not this one. It's another one. It's tore down. That's all caved in.

(Yeah)

That's where I was raised up. And this old--that other about where you come up at.

(Yeah)

Not really too old. 'Course it's mostly nobody hadn't take care of it.

(Yeah)

It's not ours. It's on another property. Belongs to another people. But we lived in it. We built it.

(Uh-huh)

And we found out we was living on somebody else land so we built this one. And moved in here.

(Yeah)

It's been about eight or ten years ago it was.

(Well do they--no one makes log house anymore. Do they?)

What?

(Nobody builds log houses anymore.)

No hardly ever, No more.

(No it's just--)

No hardly ever no more. Just those log houses. You seen what's been built long time back.

(Yeah. Uh-huh. Yeah nearly all of them are real old.)

And some of them are good house yet.

(Some of them are good one.)
