

Yes, bunch of them. John raised big bunches of boys. I think seven or eight. Now they got boys big enough to be older than Henry's boys.

(Yeah then there was the Dick family, Brown.)

Yeah.

(And the Blackfeathers.)

THE DICK FAMILY - GEORGE DICK KILLED FAYE BEARD - ACQUITTED

And Wash Dick was a Cherokee. He lived towards Catale.

(Yeah)

And then George Dick's father--George Dick killed Faye Beard in Catale.

Wash Dick was a full blood Cherokee. He talked in the Cherokee language.

He used to teach. His wife was blind.

(Uh-huh)

I know when they was trying George Dick for Killing Faye Beard, Preston Davis was the judge. They was trying to tell some sympathy stories you know about some of his children he left you know. The youngest one was twelve years old. And the jury took pity on that. And he said now just wait a minute. "Clear all of this courtroom now." Clear the court long enough so that I can send and get something, and produce as evidence. He said, "Evidence in the court if that's what you want. I think sympathy is what you want. I've got it." He said, "I'll send out and get George Dick's mother."

(Uh-huh.)

He did he sent after George Dick's mother. And his mother come down to the courthouse. I remember it was three o'clock when they come in there. Brought her in the courtroom. She threwed her arms around George Dick you know.

"Oh George," she says, "You're in trouble." Cried and pretty near everybody in the courtroom cried. Preston Davis looked around and said, "Now look at their handkerchiefs." "Look you wanted sympathy." (Laughter.)

(What was the killing over? Do you--)
