

(How were those doctors--how did they look? I mean what kind of costumes did they wear?)

They just had their--My brother was dressed with the breech cloth, you know, and moccasins and no leggins, you know. Just a belt. They were kinda dancing too. You know, tooting them little things. You know.

They were dancing with them, you know, them women's. It was quite interesting. But anybody could see them, but no one could pass in front of them. Everybody had to behave. Four times they went around.

(What, around the building?)

Yeah, around that building.

(On the outside or were they in?)

Yeah, on the outside. Then they brought him in, laid him down so nice. We just all looked. It was quite interesting.

(And there were four of the doctors?)

Yeah, about four of the doctors.

BUFFALO DOCTORS: COSTUME AND REGALIA

(Did they wear any kind of head dress?)

Yeah, they had--one of them had a kind of fur-looking thing. I call it fur. But some kind of a head dress. But no feathers. And then one had a--it might have been a handkerchief, but that's all I know. They were dressed kind of--you know--our Indians long ago didn't hardly--they kind of dressed old style--oldish looking. Now they wear hats and coats and pants and trousers. They look nice just like a white man. But them days they don't have them. I'm talking something about earlier days.

(That's what I'm really interested in hearing.)

But that's all I could tell you. Just about that.

PAYMENT OF DOCTORS

(Did you ever hear whether they had to pay the doctors anything at that time?)
