

Pretty fair land over there and her folks died off. No--he married there-- it was a boy. He married at Colony and his wife had land there at Colony-- right north of Colony, somewhere in there. He died. And he started a family-- two girls and a boy. The boy died. The two girls were living. And his wife's share that he inherited, he give to his daughter. You know what happened? About three years ago that girl leased that land for sixty--no, fifty thousand dollars! And then right west of that another thing happened like that. An old man lived there.. He was my mother's half-brother. And she didn't inherit his share. He had a brother and a sister. The sister died and there was this brother living. When he died, why his brother inherited that land. Well, he married and had a daughter and when he got down so he wasn't able, he made a will. He willed that land to his daughter by his second wife. And that land leases for oil for fifty-five thousand dollars! -

(Is that just one year?)

For a five year oil lease. Now she bought a home in Wichita Falls, Texas. A thirty thousand dollar home.

(Now that lease you were talking about--the one that belonged to that girl who leased it for fifty thousand dollars--was that an oil lease?)

Yeah. An oil lease. And she turned around and bought my son-in-law's home at Weatherford. My son-in-law had a fourteen thousand dollar home. Well, my grandboys that here now (The Fletcher boys), said they wouldn't live in that home because that's where their mother was laying sick. When she died--that's where their mother and father raised them--they had a prayer meeting and all that. They said every time they come in the house, we always think about our mother. We're not going to live there. So that made their father sell that place. And this girl that got this sixty thousand dollar oil lease bought that home from my son-in-law. Lot of that's going on like that. Now here a while back an old drunkard--I don't know whether you've ever met Willie Hail
