

looked around at--it was--a person would, you know, in a strange place, you naturally look around. And we saw a mountain. Oh, it seem like it was just a little ways from where we were, so we all got in two cars--or one car, I believe, and we left to see this mountain. And we found out it was what they would call this Devil's Tower. And we left to go see that mountain--we thought it was a mountain, but it was a tower. So we left to go see it and it was so big that we thought it was near. We drove over and we found out after we got started, it was 75 miles from where we were to this tower. But we went on anyway and finally got there. And it was something to see. The tower was so bit. There was pine trees surroundin' and you could see where people have been trying to climb the tower. It was just polished like it was just polished for purpose to see, where people had climbed up there. And some climbed and some didn't.

(How did those Bad Lands strike you? Weren't they something to see too?)

Yes.

(Before you got to--?)

And there was Bad Lands there, they called at that time when we went, they called this Bad Lands, Hell's Half Acre. And it really did--it looked terrible. There was something else to see along the highway for experience. I believe I'm--

(From there you went to the Yellowstone?)

I done told about Yellowstone.

(Oh, did you?)

We come back.

INCIDENT CONCERNING CAFE

Katherine Maker: This town, you look for cafe. Now go on.

When we got to this town as we were traveling through (laughter)--
