

And things got wet. And I had to take them out.

(Well.)

To the stove and dry.

(Well, they have just about everything at the old Wauhilla store, didn't they?)

Yeah.

(I see they even handled coffins, furniture, guns, calico and lead. Gunpowder.)

And he sold wagons. He had a wagon house out there.

(Yes. Well.)

Forks and plates.

(The coffee in those days it wasn't ground up and put in packages.)

No. We had to parch it. It was green coffee.

(Green coffee.)

Yeah. We had to put it in the stove and parch it until it was right done. And then he puts it in the mill and ground it.

(Well my goodness!)

Sausage mill.

(An old time sausage mill.)

Yeah.

(I've never seen anything like this before.)

And the sausage come right out here.

(Yeah. Well. I wonder how old this is.)

I don't know. (Laughter.)

(It's over a hundred years old anyway. Well, this must have been one of the first sausage make--grinders that they had then.)

I don't know. I know but at home when I was a kid, they had big old sausage mills. Ten times bigger than this one.
