

(words inaudible). Went there and throwed his gun down on this-- these officers. Told them not to move. And they didn't move. And he said he had a time getting his father out of bed. He said he just gave up. Finally they got him out. Got him on the mule. Said they (inaudible) anywhere. And two of them was riding the mule. And one of them was riding the horse. And they took them off down--they rode all night till they got to the Fort Smith bottoms. And said there's a clean place or field or something. And they went across it. And said there they--the other fellows that was after them, said they stopped and turned back. They didn't know but what the army was standing down there. There was a lot of them. And they got away.

BITTING SPRINGS AND MULBERRY HOLLOW

(Well, now is--let's see, Bitting Springs, that's an old community here, too, isn't it? And Titanic, is that another old place?)

Huh-uh.

(It's fairly new. How about Rabbit Trap? Is that an old place?)

Yes. Rabbit Trap.

I tell you what. I took some people out there one time. (Inaudible) this now is--was that where I was? Or was it Mulberry? I took--

Jess: "(Inaudible) Mulberry. Rabbit Trap's back this side of Dad's."

I didn't know where I took them. Old Mulberry home's a pretty place.

Jess: "It's uh--that last school (inaudible). No school there now.

But uh--it's off the highway, just oh--I guess half a mile, maybe.

And then the old school used to be out there close to the highway that runs through there now. But they--most of them (inaudible)."

(Inaudible) it used to be Hungry Mountain.

(Hungry Mountain. Uh-huh.)

Jess: "But that's not Rocky Mountain. Rocky Mountain's back over here."
