

(Yeah, you can go to the grocery store. Buy it now.)

Yes. I say there's no kind of food that's much of a real treat anymore. 'Cause you can get it anytime.

(That's right.)

Ice cream, when I was a kid, was a treat. We just got it in the summer time.

(Yeah.)

Then I'd get it anytime I want it. They used to have ice cream suppers, you know. And everybody would go. Why, I wouldn't walk from here down to the church house for ice cream now.

(No. Our ways of living have certainly changed. And are going to change a whole lot more.)

I imagine so. Would you like a cup of coffee?)

PHOTOGRAPHS - MCGUFFEY'S READER - BLUE BACK SPELLER

(Well, (inaudible). Yeah. Sally Starr.)

I bet Papa went to school there. (Laughter.) (Refers to photographs.)

(Yeah, one of the first teachers at the old Caney School. That is most interesting. Yeah, here's that she--here's her name again in this uh-- and uh--why she has a date here. April the twenty-second, 1867.)

'Sixty-seven.

(What books did you have when you went to school, Mrs. Wilhite?)

Something like this is. It's McGuffey. (Inaudible) McGuffey Reader.

(McGuffey Readers.)

Yes. McGuffey Readers.

(Well, did you have what they call Blue Back Spellers, too?)

Huh-uh. No.

Juanita: "No Blue Back Speller."

I've got no Blue Back Speller.

(George O. Sanders, he studied law, didn't he? Let's see, this was--)