

in there and kicked the old man and old lady around. Abused them quite a bit. Because they figured they ought to tell them where the boys was at, you see. Well, the first one to come in, the old man told 'em about it, you see. And they sent him word not to cross that river no more. If he did, he would belong to them. And sure enough, he didn't. That's what started it all there, and they wasn't bad boys. They were good boys. And another funny thing about that. They killed the oldest brother themselves, you see. They's all, course they's gathering corn and all got drunk and got into it, I guess. And they shot him. Well, so, when they started this, they couldn't get a hold of 'em, after they killed Gilstrap and them, you see, why they told 'em to come in and surrender. But there was three of them, you see. Well, one of these marshals out of Tulsa come up there with them. They told him, you better get back to town. 'Cause we're comin' in there when we get ready. So, they got a wagon and went on in. You know, they filled that wagon full of groceries and stuff, by God, them boys went and turned 'em loose.

(Tape inaudible)

Steve Foreman.

(Yeah, Steve Foreman. I've heard of him.)

SIXKILLER FAMILY

Old Steve, course young Steve died here while back. And another old person around here was Sixkiller. Redbird Sixkiller. Course he has a boy, Joe Sixkiller. He married one of my aunts. She's still living down here in town.

(Well.)

She's getting around ninety years old. I was talking to one of the girls the other day down there, and asking how she was getting along. She said, well, she is getting around pretty good. But she can't remember.

(Interruption)

...Twenty-one or two years here and of course there was kids here that
