

Lady: No books. Well, you know Jim, they didn't and some of them had to study the almanac, you know. They had an almanac.

(Well.)

That's the only book that had and it old old book, anything.

Second lady: It was quite a revelation for them then wasn't it?

First lady: And then when he'd get the others to pay. He had to go all around over the district, you know, and collect the fees he would get, you know. And I think he made about five dollars. No more than that. What he'd collect, you know, from the patrons. Now wasn't that awful?

(Just came from everywhere.)

Fourth lady: Did he have a blackboard?

Third lady: Yeah I think he had a blackboard? Put it on the board and have 'em copy it.

Fourth lady: We went to that old female seminary.

(Well.)

Third lady: Way back there--it was Park Hill.

(Yeah.)

Third lady: It was pretty out there anyhow.

(Park Hill. Now see that started in 1851 so she had a chance then to go there.)

Third lady: Yeah.

Fourth lady: Is that where mother went?

Third lady: Yeah.

Fourth lady: Goes back earlier I guess. Well, I don't know whether Grandma Young was any--much younger than Grandma Tiger or not. Was she?

(Oh, that was Sam Tollett and his dad. What was his dad's name?)

Jim: Well, I don't know what was the first--his first name was. Anyway Sam and his dad had jobs doing the farming and hauling the water.
