

(But most of these Limes--do they all go back to Morris?)

Jess: Yeah, Morris.

DRUNK INDIANS, THEIR BEHAVIOR

Bob: --I leave Jess in Canton in the pool hall when I go to Seiling and make my rounds. I got in there that evening--you know--pretty late, and when I called you this old James Scabby Horse came out. He was drinking. He's an alcoholic--he's got a good family up there, and he was gonna get in my car. You know, they want to get in your car to talk. Don't ever do that. Don't ever let them get in your car. Anytime you get them in there, you can't get them out. I said, "No, you're not going to get in my car." Yeah, he was gonna get in there. Finally--he was wanting me to help him quit drinking. I'd keep talking to him that that was his worst enemy. He's a skilled mechanic. He's been sent to Chicago to school and he had a good job there, and he gave it up and came back to Canton. And I went down to the center for something and he came out and he was going to go home with me. And he got a hold of my lapels like this, and I said, "You're not going home with me, James." "I'm going to go home with you." I got hold of his hands, and I said, "You get your hands off me and don't you ever talk to me while you're drunk. If you're going to talk to me, you sober up. And I'll talk to you about breaking this habit. But you're going to have to want to stop drinking before I can do anything for you."

"I was in Margaret's home trying to get a bunch of little girls out of the back bedroom and get them in school--that's the bunch I had to send to Tecumseh. And finally I had to say, "I'm not going to threaten you girls. I'm going to make you a promise. If you're not in school next Monday--"

--I'd been working with them for weeks at a time--"I'm going to make you a promise. If you're not in school Monday, I'm going to see if I can't send every one of you to a training school. That's just where you're going. It just takes a judge five minutes whenever I make a complaint down there."
