

They did it theirselves, like I was tellin you 'bout when old person, she make the board herself and it was from a tree--she want it from a certain kind of tree. And they got the tree down--I don't know how they did it but, see that wasn't my time--I was young I guess. I didn't know nothin' 'bout it. So, that's what I've always been told that she did that. So I went and put the trimmin's on there. I think I had this big board made, but I don't remember who made it and then I got that--that piece that goes up you know.

(Oh, that--how did they bend that piece around like it goes over there?)

I don't know how they did it. He did it. He already--I think I already had one there. I don't think he made that part. He just make the board. I had the other part, so I just put it on there.

(It seems like they must a got a--these old people had a way of getting a piece of--looks like to me, a green limb, bent it over like that and try to shape it where it would stay.)

I used to see one--old board--I guess that is what they used to do. It wasn't kinda squared like that, it was just bow round like that.

(In later years, I imagine they learned how to--)

Make'em better you know. Make'm have corner to it. But that one I saw was round. But this one I had made, I done had this top part. I don't know where I got it and trimmed it up and put bells--I strung the bells with bucksins and tied'em up there on it.

(That was these little small--about inch bells weren't they?)

They'd be small bells you know.

(Where did you get them bells? You know? Store, or somewhere?)

They used to have 'em--I guess they used to have'em long time ago in store, here.

(Trading Post.)

Tradin' Post, you know where they have--they used to have a general store there, have everything--goods, shoes, groceries, just anything. Just general store.
