

(Mrs. Frye's sentence not clear.)

(Well you got to.)

So far they don't know who they were.

(They don't know who they were.)

Well, I just been for myself here where we have (inaudible). I can trace back to my great-great-great-grandmother and grandfather. (Inaudible.)

If you (inaudible) from the (inaudible)

(Yes.)

SCHOOLS

You see that little church building?

(Yes ma'am.)

Well, there's a big, big house there. Right where the school used to be.

(Sentence inaudible.) Oh, I don't know how far. But anyhow this church here and this boarding house over here and this empty place right here, right along in there somewheres is where the school house was. Just a little bitty school house.

(Well.)

Just one room and that's all there was.

(They didn't have many schools then, did they?)

No sir, not too many. When I first knew school was there, I was fifteen years old.

(Well.)

My first year in school. And I remember my daddy went up to the teacher and he was saying that I had a brother older than I am. He said his name was so and so, and my name was so and so, and my little sister. Well, we didn't go to school half the time because it was so far. We lived way back over in there. In the winter time we didn't go hardly any because there was so many snows, rain and everything else.
