

you know. Lot about it. He would understand. Now Walter, he know quite a bit if he would talk, you know.

(He won't talk like in tape.)

He won't? (Laughter)

(He won't tape for Marguerite. That's like Mrs. Russell won't tape for Katherine either.) (Laughter)

Uh-huh.

(She'd tell her though. She said she could take it down in writing. She said, you tell it, cause she wants to talk Indian.)

Uh-huh.

STORY ABOUT WINTERTIME AND HUNGER

Fred: You know Simon, he telling us a story about wintertime like this. Up in Kansas, you know. Up there it's--when it's good they kind of move, you know, where the buffalo move, for the game, you know. And when it cold they move this way, south. That way, winter come early that time and they already made camp, you know, they figured they was going turn back and this month and next one and about that time winter come. And they camp what--in the timber and they can fall back on and tie their horses and all that what they had to the trees and try to make shelter for them. And they make shelters for the people, make shelters, you know. And the weather lasted so long, you know, ah ration. Clean out, some of them getting sick, not enough nourishment. There was always someone in a group, you know, they can sort of rely on. And when that time come why they used that pipe they give to a certain man and then he talked, you know, to the Almighty, you know, and go through a ceremony with that pipe for better luck, better outlook, better days that way. So they got through, still that weather won't let up and snow just covered the shed. What ration they had was given toward the end of it and they just didn't know what to do and this old man he talk and smoking so they had to put a doorway. They had to make kind
