

(Now it would have been all right if we'd went and work with the Indian folks somewhere, but it was a new world to most of us.)

It sure was. Now it was really new cause I--that place like that too, big place in the city, that was really hard. But she had someone there to meet me there at the bus station. In her home. Now she kept me in her home till-- in the meantime somebody else got the place. I mean, you know, they wanted somebody right away so they couldn't hold that up for me. She said, "I'll get you a place in a day or two." So, in the meantime I went to visit Haskell kids you know. And I suppose you were there, Mary was there, Mary Ellison--Scrubbs.

(Yeah, I was there.)

Whatever became of Scrubbs?

STUDENTS AT CHILOCCO WENT TO TOWN ONCE A MONTH

(Chilocco was pretty far away from town.)

And I guess it was a good thing.

(Yes. How often did they let them go to--up to Arkansas City in our days then?)

Oh, the girls we just went, they just let us go once a month.

(Once a month.)

Once a month.

(That was a big day, wasn't it?)

It was if you had--

(What did they call it--town day, wasn't it?)

Town day.

(Town day.)

If you was lucky enough to have a dollar to town in them days you could go.

(Yeah.)

But now I don't guess you get very far for a dollar. (laughter)
