

boy had never competed one day in competitive sports in his life. And he went down there and last spring he entered the state track meet in Norman, and he came out the state champion in the two mile run. He'd never competed a day in competitive athletics in his life.

(Where is he now?)

Bob: Wouthwestern. When I talked to all these people I said, "Now the boy had his choice. He could have either-- If we had let him along--if nobody had picked him up--he'd have been serving time in McAlester. As it is, he's enrolled as a freshman at Southwestern."

(Well, that's promising--)

Bob: Well, it just shows that you can't give up on them, all of a sudden.

JUVENILE DELINQUENCY AMONG WHITES

(By way of contrast, do many of the white people in this part of the country have similar problems, like alcoholism or getting picked up and spending a lot of time in jail?)

Bob: Well, it's not all Indians. If you notice in this Geary Star right here, three little teenage girls, twelve and thirteen, burglarized thirty-nine places, broken into homes and they'd go to band concerts over at the stadium in Weatherford and get underneath and when a person had a purse beside them, they'd open the purse up and take the money out and close it back up while they were interested in something out there. That's in here--that's white girls. Now you'll find that white girls get pregnant, just like the Indian girls get pregnant, but the thing of it is this, most of the white people have enough money and enough influence that they can go to their private physician and get the necessary treatment that they need, while the Indian kid has to go to the clinic, which is almost public.

(Is this the Indian hospital or--?)

Bob: Well, we've got a clinic up here. You first have to go through your clinic and your local doctor and have an authorization to enter the hospital, unless it's an emergency. Is that right Jess?
