

Jim Laci, her stepdaddy, told me, said all you had to have was $10 go down there and get on the roll.

(Well.)

That's what he said. They just walked through there and put 'em on the roll, you know. Ridges, they was all more white than anything else,

(Yeah.)

Old John Ross was about an eighth, you know. And them Ridges, you know, they started they were English start in with. Then the Rosses, they Rosses killed the Ridges, you know, the Ridges sold out down there and the Rosses didn't want to, when they come here. Why they was still enemies, you know.

(There was still bad blood there?)

Yeah, yeah, hard feelings. Old John Ross was a Scotsman really.

OLD RELICS - HANDCUFFS - 150 YEARS OLD

(Yeah. This is early handcuffs here.)

Oh, yeah, no telling how old they are. I don't know. He had 'em since I knew him. He'd been, well, 130 years old, anyways. Been older than that I guess.

(Well, a man shackled with a pair of handcuffs like this, now he'd stay put, didn't he?)

Well, no those are easy to unlock. These here smart boys today would unlock 'em fast as you put 'em on. We've lost the key to 'em. But I can still unlock 'em with a string. It's just a plunger lock, you know.

Frank: Is that a metal of some kind?

(Yeah, its that iron.)

Frank: Its steel or iron, iron I suppose.

(Yeah, it's a pair of handcuffs that was used 150 years ago.)

You know just half of these boys can get their hand through that.
