

That's what It says. And that means that the oceans dried up. And I believe that (Indians) they come right straight across on dry land. Oh, maybe there was puddles of water where there was sea food for them to live on coming across. (Yeah.)

It was many days maybe coming across. And there were people that we'd call a poor class of people. Because they were neglected. And they lived in caves. It says in the Bible.

(Yeah.)

Where there some of them lived in caves. I think that time when Elijah was doing that praying.

(Yeah.)

All this was taking place. And I believe that God give them the instinct that they could come across that--follow that water front as a guide. And they had an instinct that there was another continent over here for them to live on. And when they got here, I believe that there was plenty. This was the Garden of Eden for them.

(It must have been.)

I mean there was plenty of fruit. Plenty of everything. I know grandma used to say, Said that well she never--but some old people told here that they gathered seeds out of stuff that grew wild. And they made bread out of it.

(Well.)

Now whatever that was. Whether it was a certain substance of wheat or what it was.

(Could have been.)

Had to be sorted out and (not clear). And I believe that they come across over here on dry land.

(Could very well be. Uh-huh.)

Course now the Eskimos, we know that the Eskimos come to Alaska. You know they said they come across on the Bering Straits. Now we know that the Alaskans lives up there. We know that. And they're different class of people.
