

Then whenever they'd make the trade, why they'd flinch the biggest part of that Indians' land.

STORY ABOUT SWINDLE AND DISHONESTY OF THE ENGLISH

Just like this story in the history. They got around the chief. Told the chief, "We;d like to trade for a piece of land just the size of this deer hide."

(Yeah.)

Chief looked at the deer hide. Looked at them. He studied now what will they do? What will they do with that small piece of ground. Dig a hole go right down in the earth. That's the way he decided. And he traded. Traded a piece of land. After they traded, they stripped this hide up, in small strips--history says. And they stretched it around mahy acres of land. It says. Now that's how they cheated, swindled and defrauded the Indian out of his land. And then when got the Indian (not clear). They had just a small tract of land to live on. Couldn't make a living on it. And one neighbor would go--try to go and visit another neighbor and he'd go across this Englishman's land. And he'd maybe get shot down. Then they'd tell them, "Don't walk across there. That's my land." They'd prevent them from going across their land. And then they got them on this small tract of land. Well they didn't know what to do. Then they got to the government. The English controlled our government at that time. The constitution that we've got, was written by the English people. It wasn't written by the American people. That's what I say. We're hog tied and hobbled yet. We're not loose. We're not free,

(Oh no.)

And they went to the government. He says we'll give them that little piece of land way down there where them Spaniards is.

(Uh-huh.)
