

have a trade there, job. He's got a son that's our business, our chairman of our business committee for Delawares.

(Well.)

Yeah. He lives at Bartlesville, of course. He worked for Phillips there for years as a tax accountant, I believe. Of course, he finally retired, I think, couple years ago. He don't do anything now, he retired. Pretty well fixed, I guess. He's got a nice home down there.

(Are there any Delawares living in Nowata?)

I think there's a few there.

(I know some Cherokees there, but I haven't run across any Delawares yet.)

INCIDENT - MORE ABOUT LANGUAGE

There was quite a bunch of them there. (Static) Nowata's friendly, if you want to go to a lawyer or something, I don't know. Anyway, we went down there. Well it was pretty near noon, lawyers was gone. He had gone to dinner. He said, "Well, let's go eat then we'll see the lawyer after we've had gone to dinner." So we went to a restaurant there. (not clear) they called it. (Words not clear) lot of 'em where you go in, of course, you clean your feet off, and go on in the restaurant. Well we got through eating why he went ahead up to pay for the meal. So I said, well, I'll go on out, so I got out this little (not clear) I was standing in inside. I just happened to listen I heard somebody talking Delaware. Just a talking away.

(Well.)

Well I waited until Ed come out. I said listen to something, I want you to listen to something. What do you hear? He said, what is is? Well, keep still, I said listen. He said doggone Delawares out there talking. I said, Yeah. Who could it be? We knowed them all. We'd been out there
