

out and investigate what became of them. I wasn't interested what became of them. Probably you might dig it up in Daily Oklahoman. You might find out just exactly what happened.

JOHNSON GANG AND FAMILY

(Well, was this the same gang that came around where this man named Johnson was living in your house?)

No. I never did know what became of Mr. Johnson, but he left.

His wife (Mrs. Gooding) was there, but she had no support, so her and her boy came and lived with my mother and father. They lived with us and they lived for years. And he grew up. Lee Jones grew up to be a man. And his mother and some other Indians--my first wife's mother and father took her and they lived--they had Mrs. Gooding with them for a long time. And they was living in Anadarko. And she was living with them. And one old Indian began to make love to her, and finally old man Big Bow had a daughter by her.

(Now, was that Abel's father?)

Abel's father. And so Abel had a half-sister! She later married Charlie Crooked Neck--or Charlie Angoo.

(Now, was this after she had the child by Big Bow?)

Yeah. She grew up and she attended the Indian School. She grew up there and married Charlie. She was practically a Kiowa.

(Now, wait a minute. Was it Mrs. Gooding that married Charlie?)

No. Mrs. Gooding was Lee Jones' mother, and she married to Abel Big Bow's father. They didn't marry. They just lived together and they had a daughter, and she married Charlie Crooked Neck.

But I never did know what became of Lee Jones. Lee Jones after he lost his Indian wife--you know he got a white wife. I don't know where he been but he lived and farmed over here at Mountain View for long time. And his boy was about maybe nine or ten years
