

We could have saved them.

(We could have sayed them and it'd been a wealth of material. And I get to thinking well maybe the things that we take for common now maybe fifty years from now well they'll be antiques. Will be worth something.)

Yeah, that's right. I guess we should be kind of saving.

SAWMILLS IN EARLY DAYS

(I guess so. Was there ever a sawmill in this country?)

Several of them.

(Well)

Used to be one right up heré. Charley Master owned a sawmill.

(Yeah)

Well, you see the old, his son, you know, just kept the place there after he died. And you can see. I don't know the mill might be there yet.

(Well)

The boys used it for quite a while after he died.

(You don't see much farming here anymore. Was there a lot of farming at one time?)

Yeah, everybody farmed.

(Well)

EARLY DAY FARMING - GARDENS

Now you can't get a renter or you can't get them to plow your garden or nothing. They use these little old tillers and tractors.

(Yes ma'am)

Them old tractors, I don't like them. I wish I had me a good old horse and double shovel.

(Well, you can put in a garden that way, alright. Thirty feet.)

Then--

(Mr. Cheater, what was his first name?)
