

No, not too much. Just once in a while you see them where they have a lot of cavities in their teeth. Some of them has pyorrhea. Not too many.

(Now their glasses, when they need a pair of glasses, it depends on if the clinic has any money left, doesn't it?)

Yes. That's right.

(They take care of the school children first...)

Oh yeah. The school children, usually, comes with their glasses and dental work. Now the government provides for that, more so - more or less than they do for the grown people.

(They try to allow them one pair a year.)

Yeah, they try.

(But if they don't have the money, they don't get that, do they?)

No, they don't. Now, for a while these clinics didn't have no money, or the hospitals didn't have the money to provide all this. But whenever they do get them, they do help'em. But the school children comes first. And we having quite a bit of dental work and the glasses. So here, about two weeks ago, a long about Christmas, I think they got a little money to provide glasses for the adults. Oh they just flogged in there - I don't know how far they'll go with the glasses. And quite a few dental works comin' in, too. Of course, if they can't do it in the clinics, they have to send them to other places where there are dentists.

(Well, as it stands right now, with the dental work, they still take only emergencies - what they consider emergencies, don't they? Generally, if it hurts, they pull it. They aren't doing any fillings or any bridge work, or anything like that.)

No. Unless the unit directors recommend it and give them authority to do these things.
