

(Yes.)

Right straight up this street. Well there's two graves out there and that street goes right square through the middle of the orphan asylum cemetery.

(Well)

Yes sir. But there was, all that's buried out there was orphans and they didn't have any stones. Just a rock.

(Yes ma'am. Well is that, is there still part of the old cemetery out there for the Orpahns asylum?)

No, there's no sign of it.

(No sign of it its all gone.)

Yes, but that's where it was because I've been out there lots of times.

(not clear) Well they took part of the children to Pryor. Well they took the big boys but they wouldn't stay. And they got out and walked right back. And there was nine of them stayed with us. Two of them got married.

(Well)

And that, there's two little graves at the end of the vineyard. And they're right down, up the street here. You know about where they are, didn't you?

(No, I don't.)

Well, they used to have a little iron fence around them but they're tore up and gone now.

(That's right up at the end of this street.)

Right up in there. I tell you. Its just this side of that cafe. Where Dorothy and Cotton run the cafe.

(Yes ma'am.)

Its right back there toward that way. That's where it was before they tore it down.

(Yeah)

And there used to be the Cooksey Orphanage. I did know their names but I
