

of them, they both lived over there close to Locust. They did. The last one died, well last August. She was ninety-two years old.

(Yeah, I remember that.)

These people are about the only one that have them decoration days now, you know, people all come together on Fourth Sunday in May. You might do down there and see.

(Now that Keener family, they must have been quite prominent down in that country weren't they?)

Yeah.

(Uh-huh. I know they, I know there was an old Keener graveyard up there close to Dolly Neugin. Then they moved it. Put a new one in, down there close to Lost City.)

Yeah. Was Johnson Keener one of them?

(John Keener was one of that bunch.)

Well he lived at Pawhuska quite a while.

(Yeah he lived with a bunch of 'em.)

Yeah. There was a bunch of Keeners.

(Yeah, a whole bunch of them.)

Yeah they are around yet.

(Yeah. Well did you live down in there and remember anything about that old Negro school or seminary?)

Yeah.

(Where was it located?)

Well, let's see.

(Had some double springs.)

Yes. Its right on Double Springs. Fact of the matter, its at the head of Double Springs. That was a big spring.
